

Integration Issues in the Americas: The Case of Migration

Francisco Alba Hernández, Ph. D.

The course seeks to present the complexity and diversity of international migrations in the Americas in the context of the processes of regional integration. The course will focus on current policy responses to deal with migration flows regarding migration management and governance at the national and international levels, both from the perspective of destination countries and of origin countries of migrants. Special consideration is given to Mexico-U.S. migration, particularly from a Mexican perspective.
